| Regular Correspondence of Whig and Courser | Bar Harbor, August 23. I'ves somed defining parties are being in-dulged in freely to-day. The contrast in dresses seen upon the street is of wide range. The dainty French gingham of sephys texture, in many instances is followed by some one in cloth and fur capes. The day, while bright, is very cool. Therei were some fears expressed that this week would wind up the gay season, which are entirely groundless.

Necretary Whitney arrived on the resti-

Mrs. Whitohy will give an informal breakfast Sunday, and sometime during the week, Thursday, prubably, will give a musicale. She has grows fond of Bar Harbor, and we may expect her each year.

AUGUSTA AND BER PUBLISHER Everybody who has any connection with Birmingham will be acquainted with the vert publishing establishment with known by the short title of "Messon's," known by the short title of "Meeson's," which is perhaps the most remarkable institution of the sort in Europe. There are—or rather there were, at the date of the beginning of this history—three partners in Meeson's—Meeson himself, the managing partner. Mr. Addison and Mr. Rocco—and people in Birmlogham used to say that there were others interested in the affair, for Meeson's was a "company" (limited).

However this may be, Meeson & Cowse undoubtedly a commercial marvel, it employed more than 2,000 hands; and its works, lighted throughout with the electric light, sowar two seres and a quar-

should melt toward the unfortunate, and the financial interests of Messon's should suffer in short, Mecson's was an establishment created for and devoted to money making, and the fact was kept studiously and even insolently before the eyes of everybody connected with it—which was, of course, as it should be, in this happy land of commerce. After all that has been written, the reader will not be surprised to learn that the partners in Messon a were rich beyond the dreams of avarice. Their pelaces would have been a wonder even in ancient Babylon, and would have excited admiration in the corruptest and most luxurious days of Rome.

women mave exerted admiration in the cor-ruptest and most luxurious days of Rome, where could one see such horses, such carriages such galleries of sculpture, or such collections of costly gems as at the palatial halls of Messre Messon, Addison & Roscoo?

One day King Meeson sat in his count the day ing incession sain in a countries ing house counting out his money, or, at least, looking over the books of the firm. He was in a very bad temper, and his heavy brows were wrinkled up in a way calculated to make the counting house cierks shake on their stools Messon's bad a branch establishment at Sydney, in Australia, which establishment had, until

"Well Mas Smithers, what is it?"

Miss Smithers rose, and then, with a spanner's effect sat down again. "The fact is Mr Meeson," she said— the fact is that I thought that, pechaps as Jo-young goutleman came slowly in. He was a very nice looking young man, tall and well shaped, with a fair skin and jolly blue eyes—in short, a typical young Englishman of the better sort, state and 2t. I have said that he came slowly in, but that scarcely conveys the gay and degage air of undependence which perveded this young man, and which would cottainly have struck any observer as little short of shocking, when contrasted with the worm like struck any observer as little short of shocking, when contrasted with the worm like struck any observer as little short of shocking. This young man had not, indeed, even taken into truthe to remove his hat, which was stuck upon the back of his bead; his heads were in his peckets, a sacrliegious whistle howard on his lips, and he opened the door of the sanctum sancturum of the Messon establishment with a kick!

"How do, uncleff" he said to the commercial terror, who was sitting there behind his formidable books, addressing him even as though he were an ordinary into "Why what any?"

Just them, however, he caught sight of the very handsome years lady who was sented in the office, and he whole demonsor underwent a most remarkable demonsor out the het, and turning, he bowed, really rather along, oundaring how inspounds the whole parfertantice were.

"What is it, Bustace" saked Mr.

It employed more than 2,000 hands; and its works, lighted throughout with the electric light, cover two seres and a quarter of land. One hundred commercial travelers, at £3 a week and a commission, went forth east and weet, and north and south, to sell the books of Meason (which were largely religious in their nature) in all lands; and five and twenty tame authors (who were illustrated by thirteen tame artists) sat—at salaries ranging from £100 to £500 a year—in vaulilike hutches in the basement, and week by week poured out that hat work for which Meason's was justly famous. Then there were editors and vios editors, and readers, and many managers; but what their manes were no man knew, because at Meason's all the employes of the great house were known by numbers, personalties and personal responsibility being the abomination of the irm. Nor was it allowed to any one having dealings with these items ever to see the same number twice, presumably for fear lest the number should remember that he was a man and a brother, and his heart should melt toward the unfortunate, and

"At the time an alternative agreement, offering you? Jeer cost, on the published price of the book, was submitted to you, and had you accepted it you would, doubtless, have realized a larger sum," and Mr. Meson contracted his hatry systems and gased at the poor girl in a way that was, to key the least, alarming. But Augusta, though she felt sadly inclined to fee, still stood to her guns, for, to tell the truth, her need was very great.

"I could not afford to wait for the 7 per cent. Mr. Meeson," she said humbly.

"Ob. yo ghiel Seven per cent., when he makes about '$1" murmured Bustace, in the background.

"Possibly, Mhs. Smithers; possibly," went on the great man. "You must really forgive me if I am' not acquainted with the enact condition of your private affairs. I am, however, award from experience that the money matters of most writing people are a little embarranced."

Augusta wheed, and Mr. Mescain, rising heavily from his chair, went to a large safe which stood near and extracted from it a bundle of agreement. These he glanced at one by one till be found what he was looking for.

"Here is the agreement," he said. "Let me see? Ah, I thought so—capyright £50, half proceeds of rights of translation, and a clause binding you to effer any future work you may produce during the next five years to our house on the 7 per cent. agreement, or a sum not exceeding £100 for the copyright. Now, Mas Smithers, what have you to say? You signed this paper of your own free will. It so bepears that we have made a large profit on 'your book; indeed I don't mind telling you that we have got as much as we gave you back from America for the sale of the American rights; but that is no ground for your coming to ask for more money than you agreed to accept. I never heard of such a thing in the whole course of my professional experience; never!" and he paused and once more syed."

'At the time an alternative agree offering you 7 per cent. on the published price of the book, was submitted to you, her sternly.

"At any rate, there ought to be something to come to me from the rights of translation—I saw in the paper that the book was to be translated into French and German," said Augusts, faintly.

"Ohl yes, no doubt—Enstace, oblige me by touching the bell."

The young gentleman did so, and a tall, melancholy looking clerk appeared.

"No. 18," smarled Mr Meeson, in the tone of peculiar amiability that he reserved for his employes, "make out the translation account of "Jeanima's Vow, and fill up a check of balance due to the author."
